Open in the summer of 2007 by Michael Rossney and Michel Levesque in their barn, this festive, popular place is serving up the local crab empanadas and spicy lobster tacos that pulled in the local crowds in its first season. Slow-cooked pork is shredded and piled with potatoes and onions in a burrito called Pork Tinga. Last winter a supper club with fine dinners ($35 fixed price for five courses) relieved the owners of some of their excess energy. Now they are back in the kitchen making chocolate and chipotle chile cookies to sandwich vanilla ice cream for dessert. Kids and others will adore the grilled PB&J quesadilla ($3.95).
